Happy Birthday to You!

Thursday, June 3, 2010

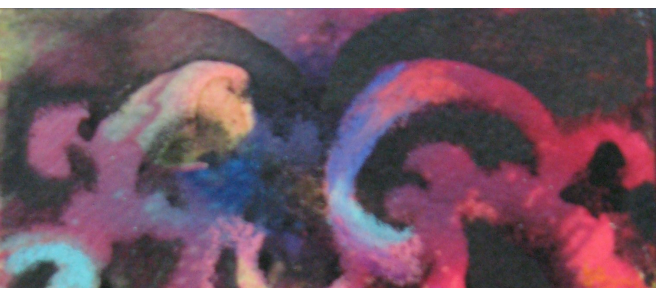

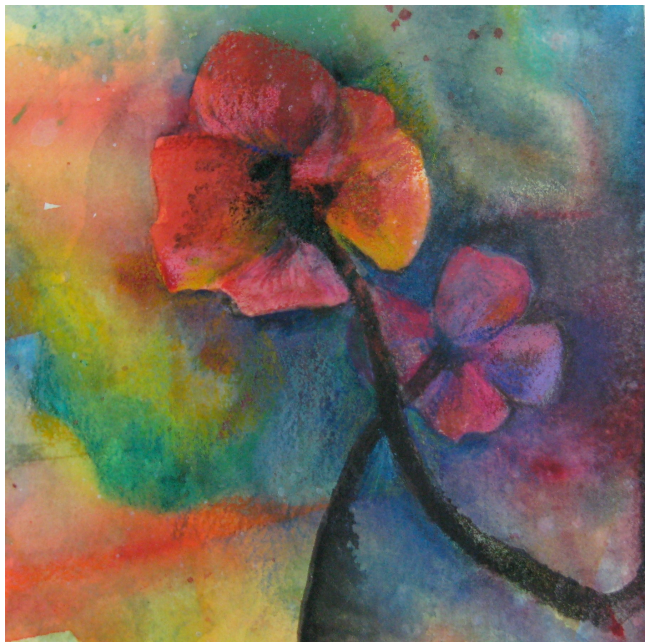

A friend once mentioned that the Sufis enjoy their birthdays for 10 days before and 10 days after, a total of 21 days of celebration! This resonated with me, I seem to get giddy around my birthday. I feel lucky to be in this world. The joy and gratitude percolates each year for more than one day.

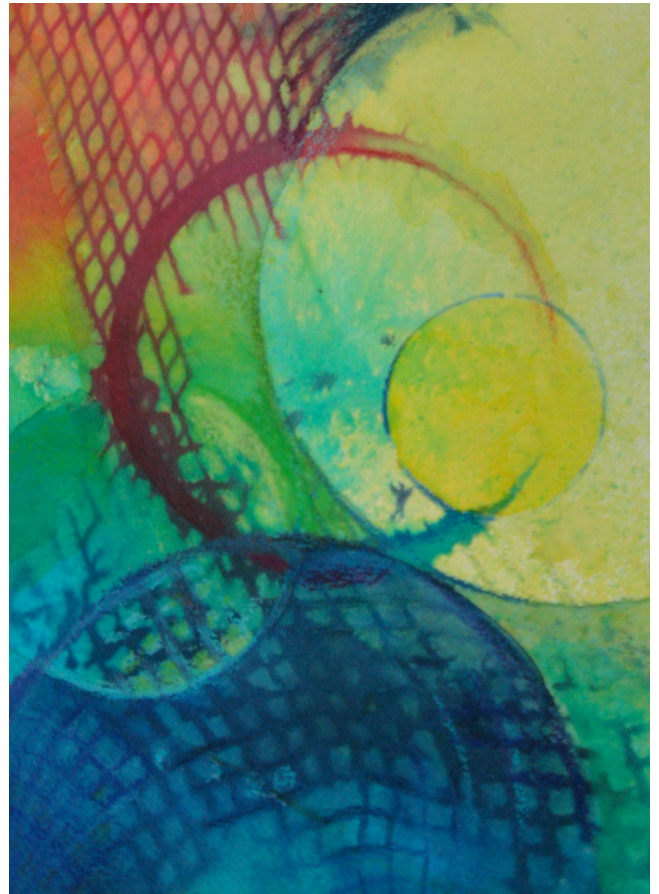

When I met my husband, I was inspired to share this tradition by giving him a card each of the 21 days. I've kept this up for 6 years, making a few cards and buying the rest. This year I thought it would be cool to make each of the cards. He was thrilled to get a handmade card over and over and over.

After I finished the 12th card I was running out of steam so I pulled out some of the cards I've made over the years that I've stashed away for myself. Along with the vintage cards, this is the collection so far. I'm still a few short but I'll get them done, his celebration will last even longer than 21 days :-)

Happy Birthday Sweetie!

These are absolutely gorgeous, Christine -- and what a wonderful idea! I've always believed in spreading out the birthday celebration! I didn't know anyone did it "officially!"

Such a pleasure meeting you at Book Club last night. It really is a warm, wonderful and incredibly diverse group for the most part, with some terrific cooks! Looking forward to seeing you next time and keeping up with you online!

Please stop over at The Marmelade Gypsy when you have some time! jeanie

These are awesome and as I look through them I see bits of "Christine" throughout the years. When I saw the bird, I'm thinking, it feels like yet another new direction. How fun.
